

ITALY MOVES STEP TOWARD READINESS FOR EUROPEAN WAR

Issue Directions for Evacuation of Cities in Event of Hostilities

PLANS "IMPERATIVE"

All Must Decide Where To Send Families in Case
Of A War

By Lindsey Parrott
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

ROME, Feb. 5.—(INS)—Italy moved a step farther today in preparation for a European war when the National Union for Air Defense, a subsidiary of the Ministry of War, issued directions for immediate evacuation of all cities by women and children in the event hostilities are declared.

The union's bulletin was issued immediately following announcement by the Fascist Grand Council that it had adopted a "complete program" of retaliation against further sanctions—expected here to bring on war.

All inhabitants of cities were ordered to make immediate plans for evacuation of centers that might be raided from the air.

"Evacuation in an emergency may be made obligatory," said the bulletin. "Do not wait until the enemy raiders are upon you. From today, all must decide where to go or send their families in case of war."

The meeting of the Fascist Grand Council was preceded by a session of the Supreme Council of National Defense, at which action in case the League of Nations takes more coercive measures in a futile attempt to halt the Ethiopian war was also discussed.

Government officials refused to deny or confirm the statement of the Rome correspondent in the London Daily Express that if the League ordered an oil embargo, all ten classes of conscripts from 1901 to 1910 would be mobilized. This would amount, according to the London paper, to conscription of all able-bodied men from 25 to 35 years old, totaling more than one million.

A communique issued after the mid-night session of the Fascist body tersely said: "Lines of determined counteraction to be followed in case of further enforcement of sanctions were decided upon."

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—(INS)—A new move on the part of the League of Nations to make the United States the scapegoat for failure of the European nations to impose an oil embargo against Italy was seen in authoritative quarters here today.

Geneva reports that the League oil embargo committee was planning to make imposition of that embargo conditional upon America's willingness to commit itself to apply an embargo was viewed as a deliberate move to shoulder this country with responsibility for failure of the League powers to impose the embargo.

The League powers, with the exception of Great Britain and a few others, were regarded as neither willing nor capable of imposing an effective oil embargo against Italy, irrespective of this government's position.

In this connection it was recalled that when it appeared last October that this government might co-operate in an oil embargo, both France and Rumania quickly ran out on the proposal, France flatly refusing to participate at that time.

The issue is once again before the League of Nations and France, particularly, is believed to be desirous of seeking an avenue of escape.

Officials here fully expect this country's refusal to commit itself will be the avenue of escape to which France resorts.

DENY BADOGLIO WILL BE RECALLED FROM AFRICA

Rumored That He Would Take Up Task of Home
Defense in Italy

RECALL CONTEMPLATED

ROME, Feb. 5.—Emphasis was placed on the danger of war in Europe today when officials denied that Marshal Pietro Badoglio, Italian Army Chief of Staff, would be recalled from his command in East Africa to take up the more important task of home defense.

As the Supreme Defense Council met today, unconfirmed reports were heard that General Pietro Argo would be sent to Eritrea to replace Marshal Pietro Badoglio.

While a spokesman said that a recall was "contemplated," foreign circles pointed out that early rumors were heard that he would succeed General Emilio De Bono, who conducted the initial campaign in Ethiopia, but they were denied.

General De Bono was relieved of his command and made a Marshal.

General Ruggero Santini and Pietro Maravigna, two of the outstanding commanders of the northern Ethiopian front, were summoned back to Italy as General Badoglio is supplanted, the report said.

Fair and Colder Weather Is On The Way Here

Fair and colder is the prediction of the weather man for tonight. Nature sent her wrath on most of the states east of the Rocky Mountains today.

Arctic blasts coming out of Canadian wastes brought blasts to the northwest. Des Moines reported 18 below zero early today, and unofficial readings minus 39 in northern Ohio.

The mercury dropped to 12 below in Chicago today. Two deaths were attributed to the cold in Indiana, as the mercury fell to 3 below.

Minneapolis was still in the grasp of biting Arctic weather, while the mercury ranged from 24 below in St. Paul and Minneapolis, to 34 below in other points. Warnings that the temperature in the Twin Cities may drop to 40 below, were issued by the Weather Bureau.

Leap Year Dance At Croydon Fire Station

The Croydon firemen are presenting tonight in the fire house, something different from the dances recently conducted. These affairs have been successful and well attended with the promise of more in the future. Tonight's setting will be in a romantic atmosphere befitting an affair of its kind. This will be made possible by the colored lighting effects. Novelty dances will top the program, together with snappy and inspiring music with none other than Les Williams as master of ceremonies.

In order to make this a traditional leap year affair it is urged that the women take advantage of the privilege presented tonight.

Girls, you do the asking, this is your night. So on with the dance.

GOV. LANDON SPEAKS

(New York American, January 31, 1936)

The Kansas Day speech of Governor Alf M. Landon shows that HE BELONGS TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE.

His clear cut formulation of American principles and ideals was far removed from political claptrap.

In essentials, it appeals equally to DEMOCRATS and REPUBLICANS who still believe in the promise of American life.

THE GOVERNOR OF KANSAS SPOKE FOR NO SPECIAL INTERESTS.

He articulated the views of THE REAL FORGOTTEN MAN, the man whom William Graham Sumner, originator of the phrase, had in mind, namely, THE HARD-WORKING, SELF-SUPPORTING FAMILY HEAD, who seeks no graft or special privileges, only an opportunity to be protected in his right to work and serve.

Governor Landon spoke also for the frugal housewives of the nation, for the millions of beneficiaries of life insurance policies, and the tens of millions of owners of savings accounts. Governor Landon held a brief against hysteria in government.

He argued against the messianic complex. He stood out stoutly against demagogic efforts to divide class against class.

Governor Landon made the speech of a PATRIOT at Topeka on Wednesday night.

It was calm, fair, free from exaggeration, but unflinching, and in dealing with the follies of the Roosevelt Administration, its insane expenditure and waste, and its flagrant betrayal of American principles, it was CRUSHING and UNANSWERABLE.

Beginning his address with a reminder of our debt to the Constitution and that our ancient rights are safe only as the Constitution stays "written in our hearts," Governor Landon gave warning that powerful forces today are trying to convince the people that the Constitution is not their charter of human liberties.

"Should these forces prevail," said he, "the American Government then becomes a source of oppression such as now afflicts various other peoples throughout the world."

He turned to the rapid exhaustion of our resources in vain experiments and politically-prompted undertakings, involving outlays beyond calculation but without value or utility.

"We are exhausting our capital on useless projects which advance us no farther on our way," said Landon.

"A nation will survive to correct its political mistakes. But if an UNSOUND FINANCIAL PROGRAM is coupled with them the NATION FACES DESTRUCTION."

Discounting the Administration's pretense that the dislocation of the Federal finances, and the threat to the nation's credit have come about through the demands for relief, Governor Landon said:

"That is only a half truth.

"The money actually reaching the unemployed and impoverished has not rocked the Treasury.

"THE ROCKING HAS BEEN DONE BY ABYSMAL WASTE THROUGH CHANGES OF POLICY, MALADMINISTRATION AND RUTHLESS PARTISANSHIP."

What man conversant with the fact will attempt to deny the truth of this, or of Governor Landon's further statement:

"Bureaucracy has eaten up too much of the funds intended for relief. We need desperately a cheaper, simpler and more responsible Administration throughout the nation."

Passing to the Administration's waste of billions without substantially affecting the problem of unemployment, the Governor emphasized the fact that EMPLOYMENT, not aid, is our larger problem, and that there are almost as many persons out of work today as there were when the New Deal "first set up shop in 1933."

Harrison, vice-chairmen, these larger gifts have been secured. Lt.-Colonel James A. Harvey, Divisional Commander of the Army, gave figures which show that The Salvation Army has one of the lowest overheads for administration of any relief organization in the country, and to be untangled by red tape. He said that

Determined To "Clean Up" Ethiopian Bands

Rome, Feb. 5.—Italian determination to clean up the Ethiopian bands in the far flung southern front before the rains set in this spring, and before travelling for Addis Ababa was suggested in military communique No. 115 today, which said operations along the river had been resumed.

It also stated in the communique that the Italians had occupied a village on the river about 30 miles north of Dolo. Dispatches from Dolo nearly three months ago claimed that Italian forces meeting the forces of Ras Demu had taken that hamlet. Reports from the battle on the river front today placed a different face on the war map of southern Ethiopia than previous dispatches had predicted.

One column of General Graziani's forces were said to have routed the army of Ras Desta.

YOUTH OF TWENTY PROVIDES A REAL PROBLEM IN COURT

Looks Like Serious Student; But Escapes Are Varied

ADMITS ROBBERY

"Hooked" School Continuously; Sister Can't "Figure Him Out"

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 5.—A slender, bespectacled youth, Isaac Richards Sanders, who pleaded guilty to a charge of larceny, burglary and receiving stolen goods, presented a problem which has been baffling Camden police, his sister and the local Court when he appeared before Judge Calvin S. Boyer on Monday.

The youth, who is 20 years old, has a brother in prison, a mother in an asylum and a father somewhere in Texas, was arrested by County Detective Russo and State Policemen after he robbed the home of John Myers, near Feasterville, January 16, stealing shotguns, three revolvers, money and other articles while the household was asleep.

He admitted carrying the stolen goods to Camden, N. J., the home of his sister, in a stolen car. Most of the loot was recovered by the police. A clue to the robber was given by a pet monkey, who chattered slightly as the young man entered the cellar, but would have put up a vicious howl had he not known the defendant.

John Myers testified that the defendant was employed at his place in the capacity of a farmhand. "His conduct seemed all right, but he used to go out and stay out all night. When he talked about burning barns down after exchanging a new horse for an old one my father decided to get rid of him and discharged him."

County Detective Russo and State policemen, who experienced a wholesale shooting match in Camden when the youth attempted to flee from the officers, testified that he did things without knowing why he did them and doubted very much whether he was responsible for all his actions.

The defendant, who looks as though he might be a serious student, justified his crime by telling Judge Boyer that he was unemployed and needed money to send to his brother who is in prison to procure a lawyer.

He admitted having attended Jamesburg School for 18 months and said he was sent by a Camden judge because he "hooked school and rode on the rear of trolley cars."

His sister, Mrs. James Start, of Camden, N. J., who testified, explained that she gave up her job to keep the family together after the mother was taken to an institution but that her brother continuously "hooked school" and she could do nothing with him.

"When he was eight years old he was run over by an automobile and suffered injuries to his chest. He always talks sensible, but I can't figure him out. I thought he stayed in too much at nights."

Upon questioning by Assistant District Attorney Edward G. Biester, Mrs. Start thought he was in the night he was near Feasterville robbing the farmhouse.

Judge Boyer delayed sentence until he can communicate with a Camden, N. J., authority.

The defendant is twenty years old and the Court did not think it advisable to send him to a reform school because he will be 21 within a few months and there would be difficulties involved with reference to his age.

BOOM IN BALL PLAYERS

One of the dizziest of new developments in sport is the price the base ball trader is putting on his livestock. To Tom Yawkey of Boston, and his readiness to slip the rubber band from the bankroll in the Red Sox's behalf, is attributed the scale of values that now seems to apply.

The owner of the Indians reveals an offer of more than $241,000 by the Yankees for outfielders Averill and Vosmik. These are figures that might have occurred in an opium-eater's dream. For half that sum the Tigers got Cochrane and two pen-nants and Cochrane's are phenomena that occur only once in a base ball lifetime.

The Yankees are also rumored in the market for Buddy Myers of Washington, but the figure put on Myers is prohibitive, even for Colonel Ruppert. Myers is the Leagues' leading batsman, but scarcely the difference between the present Yankees and a pennant.

Perhaps the extravagant values put on trading material will prove a blessing in disguise. There are no more than four clubs in a position to strengthen themselves by a lavish outlay of money. The other 12 are restricted to the older system, of detecting the budding genius and raising their own stars. The richer clubs may in turn revert to that practice, as one after another of their purchased stars fails to redeem the investment he represents.

Already, Powel Crosley, Jr., millionaire owner of the Reds, has been weaned from the idea of buying a pennant and is trying to put together a winning combination from kid players and lots of them.

PASSING UP A FORTUNE

We don't know just what conversational substitute the dentists will find for that: "Now, this will hurt a little," but we are glad that Dr. Leroy L. Hartman of the Columbia School of Dental and Oral Surgery has discovered how to make dental drilling painless. Dr.
Hartman did not just happen on his discovery. Twenty years of careful research and experiment preceded his formula for desensitizing teeth about to go under the drill.

There was drama in Dr. Hartman's announcement of his formula before 2,000 dentists and research workers in New York the other night. There was drama in the fact that, as soon as the formula was made public, dental laboratories began to turn out the product.

But there was something far finer than drama in Dr. Hartman's simple, matter-of-fact renunciation of all personal profit from his years of toil. Although he was reported to have been offered $250,000 for the patent, he preferred to make his secret formula known to all the world, placing no restriction on manufacture of the compound.
This action, Dr. Hartman estimates, will enable the manufacturer to sell the dentist the product at about half the price which a patent would entail. He figures that it will cost about 75 cents to make enough of the desensitizer for 200 applications.

Remembering that $250,000 which Dr. Hartman passed up, one is not surprised to find him quoted as remarking: "It is absolutely dirt cheap and if anyone is charged a big price for it, I should like to know about it."

"HIGH SCHOOL TRAGEDY"

CHAPTER XXV

Thanksgiving Day was usually a complete holiday with us. This year I didn't give much thought to what we had to be thankful for. The whole family was in anything but a festive mood. Allen was the center of our thoughts, and his predicament took on the aspect of something appalling when the four of us were alone in the house.

As the police had granted permission to Bruce Lloyd to have dinner with us, we had decided to have the turkey at night and only a lunch at noon. I was rather surprised that in the midst of our own trouble and after the bitterness Dad had expressed concerning Bruce when he ran away, that he had gone to the trouble of inviting him to our house.
I guess he must have felt a certain kinship to him after Allen got into trouble.

I suppose every household in St.
Joseph talked about Mrs. Carrington when they sat down to the midday meal. She had been questioned by the Inspector the night before, admitted some exciting facts, and he had allowed the papers to publish them. Maybe he couldn't prevent their doing so.

After George left her that Sunday of October 16th, she had debated for some time what to do. She did not doubt for a moment that he had gone to St. Joseph to see Connie.

"I decided on two things," she was quoted as saying. "One was that my husband's affair with Miss Sinclair was a serious one. I had been convinced of it after my conversation with her during the preceding week, but I had waited for further proof. Had she communicated with him, telling him of my visit and breaking their friendship, he would have discussed it with me, at least been angry. But he left as usual, happily, for his meeting with her that Sunday. I knew that she and I were obstructing each other's happiness, that one of us must be removed from George's life."

Oh, boy, what a statement! It was the headline of the day—JUST
WHAT DID MRS. CARRINGTON MEAN BY "REMOVE"?

"Her lawyer must be wild," commented Dad.

"Why did she talk without him?"
wondered Mother.

"Various reasons," replied Dad, and dropped the subject.

Having seen her arrogance in the Inspector's office, I concluded that she felt herself quite equal to handling the small town detectives alone.

Asked directly what she meant by "remove," she explained that she had determined to divorce George.
The second decision followed immediately upon that.

"I then thought," the quotation continued, "that the logical action for me to take was to leave Mr. Car-rington's house at once. Then it occurred to me that it might be valuable to have seen my husband with this other woman. So the train conductor is quite correct; I did come to St. Joseph that night."

Did I have to listen to "I told youso's" from Helen the next week? I began to think at this point that Helen was a better detective than I was, for while I had been fooling around with trivial little details, she had used her imagination to figure out just what Mrs. Carrington had done. I was somewhat blue over my own failure.

George's wife had gone to a café across the street from Connie's apartment. As she had taken some time to plan her course of action and longer to pack her personal belongings, and spent another hour checking her bags in San Francisco, it was early evening before she reached St. Joseph. She ordered dinner and took a long time eating it, waiting for George's car to appear at Connie's.

Since the café was on one street and he had parked on another side street, she did not see the "love-scene" the newsboy had described.
She did see George and Connie come to the apartment door, however.

"Did he enter the building?" she was asked.

"No. Apparently they were disagreeing. She insisted on his leaving."

"He did so?"

"Yes, after kissing her goodnight."

"Ah!" the reporter is supposed to have exclaimed when reviewing this testimony. "Mrs. Carrington, will you make a statement as to how you felt when you witnessed this, as to what influence it had on your subsequent actions?"

Naturally this was dumb. No murderer would have answered that truthfully, and no innocent person would have allowed herself to be led into this trap. Mrs. Carrington, however, was throwing caution to the winds apparently. She did obligingly make a statement:

"I don't remember that I felt any particular emotion. It merely confirmed my previous decision."

"The decision to remove Connie Sinclair from your husband's life?"

"The decision to remove myself from it by divorce," she snapped.

"Did you reveal yourself to your husband?"

"Naturally not. I waited until he had left; then I took the train back to San Francisco. There I registered at a hotel, remaining there several days until I had consulted a lawyer about the divorce action."

Asked when she had left San Francisco, she said Friday, the 21st.
Ask why, she said she had thought the matter over carefully, had talked with an attorney, and decided the simplest arrangement would be to secure her freedom in Mexico.

Wishing to recover from the shock and disillusion of her marital troubles, she thought it would be pleasant to stop at various places along the coast to see different friends. It was not until she reached San Diego that she determined to go to Juarez for her divorce and then spend some time travelling, a decision which accounted for her message about the trunks.

"But," she was asked, "you left San Francisco after Miss Constance Sinclair was killed; where were you the night of October 20th?"

There came the shock, the weakest point in her whole sensational story. She answered that she had attended a movie, alone. In other words, she had no alibi.

Dicky thought this pretty damning. He came for me about one-thirty as we were going to a footbal game. I must say that I took time out to dress for that. After I had got into my new gray wool tweed suit with the orange sweater-blouse and beret to match, pulled on my gray suede gloves which matched my oxfords, and touched my cheeks with a dash of orange rouge (which Mother was too preoccupied to notice), I felt a great deal better and happier than I had in several days. It is wonderful what a few new clothes will do to a woman's frame of mind!

"Well, seeing that I'm escorting the Queen of Sheba herself," moaned Dicky in pretense, "I suppose I'll have to raise four bits for a corsage!"

He went through all his pockets, digging up a dime here and a nickel there until he had the fifty cents. I sat smilingly and silent while he got the shekels together. Some girls would have said, "Oh, please don't bother! Really I don't want one."

But I've found that is bad technique; pretty soon they get so they believe you mean it, and you never get so much as a nasturtium. Anyway, I think it pays, if you aren't extravagant, to let a boy know you are something that comes a little high.

They think then you are quite—special. So Thanksgiving Day I had a big orange corsage with a black SJ on it—St. Joseph's colors.

Geo. it was an exciting game! We had a grand time and forgot all about the murder. We were reminded of it as soon as we returned home, however.

"There sure are enough people loitering around here," Dicky complained as we hopped backward, stopping directly in front of our cement block. I looked at him pityingly; Dicky's brain is really good, but it does work slowly.

"Don't you remember that Bruce Lloyd is having dinner with us?"

"You don't think I'd be likely to forget it, do you? I wouldn't have accepted your mother's invitation after you told me that, if I didn't know how she can wow you with her meals."

"And why not?"

"For the simple reason that no man likes to see his girl gazing coveyed at some collar ad blond!"

Dicky needn't have worried.
That was all over. When Bruce ran away that time, something died in my feeling for him. He was no longer my ideal. I couldn't help regarding him sort of regretfully, because he was so handsome, and I still felt sad when I saw the Inspector's coils closing in on him, but he was no longer a misunderstood hero to me.

Of course, I didn't tell this to Dicky. It is another one of my theories about handling men, that it is just as well to let 'em worry a bit about some other man. A little jealousy properly administered, as someone has said, is good seasoning for a romance.

I waited for Dicky to get out, then I slid under the wheel and out on his side, being a little too dressed up to climb over the door on a holiday. I also took the time to look over the men to whom Dicky had referred as loiterers. One was Atwater and the other, obviously a plain-clothes man, too.

very unsatisfactory transportation facilities now provided the students of Bristol High School, who lives in New-portville and vicinity. Poor service to these students actually goes hand in hand with truancy, and therefore should be remedied immediately.

The bus takes the students to GREEN LANE, ABOUT ONE MILE FROM THE HIGH SCHOOL, in the mornings, but it does not bring them home. And what is more, a resident of Middletown Township, not Bristol Township, has the contract to do the transporting.

The voters of our township have a just right to know why decent and satisfactory transportation to and be provided for the students living in Newportville. And we have the right to know why a resident of our own the township and NOT outside its

ELEPHANT'S VENGEANCE

MADRAS, India — (INS) — A man and a boy in a suburb near here were trampled to death by an elephant which suddenly took vengeance on its cleaner. The elephant was being taken down to a lake by its mahout. Its cleaner followed behind. On the way the animal stopped to pick up some paddy (rice in the husk). The cleaner pushed the animal with a large spike. The elephant swung round, seized the cleaner with its trunk and trampled him to death. A boy, who was standing near, was accidentally knocked down and also crushed. The elephant allowed itself to be led back quietly to its stable.

"The key to real stability is not boondoggling," said he, "but permanent jobs, with the laborer worthy of his hire."

The speaker was followed with close attention when he discussed the problem of agriculture. "Solutions of this problem," said he, "are not devised as easily as a magician produces an egg from his mouth."

He proposes to deal with it on the basis of REALITY, and assumes as a starting point that the farmer is entitled to expect for his crop a price comparable to the price of the commodities he buys.

Pointing with justifiable pride to the fine record made by Kansas under his guidance, in reducing taxes, paying its way, and substantially cutting its bonded indebtedness, he reveals his scorn for the so-called liberals "who regard any suggestion of economy as reactionary."

"They seem to think," he observed, "that willingness to throw other people's money around without any consideration of value received is a peculiar sign of a pure heart."

Pointing to the ominous but too little considered fact that this irresponsible and reckless expenditure will have to be met BY THE MILLIONS WHO TOIL and who already spend ONE-QUARTER OF THEIR INCOME for taxes, he reminded his hearers that it will take a much heavier proportion of the average family's income than one-quarter "to pay the bill which political wasters have contracted in the American people's name."

His speech closed as it opened, with an emphatic avowal of his faith in the American system of government.

It was a great speech—the speech of a thoughtful, sane, responsible American.

It revealed a man of distinctly Presidential timber—equipped with power and grasp and vision and possessed of the moral qualities of firmness, courage and veracity, of which the country stands at this critical time, so sorely in need.

Ford led all other cars in 1935

THE TREND IS TOWARD THE V-8

NEWS of something good has a way of getting around. That is particularly true of an automobile. One motorist tells another. First thing you know, one car is way out in front.

That's what has happened to the Ford V-8. People bought it—saw the advantages of driving a V-8—told their friends. Production in the United States and Canada started going up and up and reached a total of 1,272,885 for 1935. This was a gain of 77% in a year—it put Ford sales more than 190,000 above any other make.

It takes an unusually good car to make a record like that. It is convincing proof of performance and satisfaction and good service—further evidence that the trend is definitely toward the V-8.

Modern motoring requires at least eight cylinders. And why not have them? The 1936 Ford gives you V-8 cylinder power, smoothness and ease of handling. On top of this it gives you the economy of operation for which Ford cars have always been famous.

We invite you to drive the new Ford V-8 and let it speak for itself. You can now buy any new Ford V-8 car for $25 a month, with the usual low down-payment. See the nearest dealer for a demonstration.
